The gloom around this city and at the White House has slightly lifted. This afternoon about 4 o'clock a change was noted in the President for the better.

The whole morning, since 5 o'clock, had been as depressing as it possibly could be without the announcement that death had made its appearance. The President himself became discouraged this morning about 7 o'clock, and it was only by bolstering him up with hope that he threw off the condition of hopelessness which, had it continued, would have been as alarming a phase of the many which have developed themselves. It is a part of the treatment that despondency in the patient shall be prevented.
